Wellington occupied Madrid after Salamanca, but the French concentrated all their armies and drove him back to Portugal. The Hornets and the Spanish cavalry that they had trained, combined to prevent the retreat becoming a rout.

Still outnumbered overall, Wellington prepares for the decisive battle by sending out the Hornet Battalions and Spanish cavalry detachments to distract as many French divisions as possible in north-east, east and south-east Spain and keep them from concentrating to help King Joseph.

Wellington then directs the rest of the Hornets to guide the army in a series of brilliant outflanking marches that drive the French all the way to Vitoria and the last great battle before Joseph flees back to France.
